Visual VBDepend review – how to automatically detect and eliminate obvious bugs in your code that may reduce code readability 01.10.2018 Many people often feel frustrated during the software development process because they tend to introduce bugs in the code they write. Some of them are obviously visible to the naked eye (e.g., spelling mistakes), but they may be far more subtle. Unfortunately, it often happens that such problems remain undetected because there are no adequate code analysis tools to detect them. Taliya, the developer of Visual VBDepend, has addressed this problem and created a highly effective set of coding rules that help developers identify some common coding issues that, although they are not visible to the naked eye, can negatively affect the readability of source code. Visual VBDepend tool can automatically analyze your project and provide you with a detailed report containing these issues. This report will help you to find and eliminate coding problems that are often overlooked by developers. The software will help you to:

- ? Automatically detect the most common issues in the code such as unused variables, uninitialized objects, missing variables, code duplications, and misspelled constants (i.e., Constants misspelled as Constant or Constants misspelled as constants).
- ? Automatically detect forgotten reference to modules and designer objects.
- ? Automatically highlight methods and properties that have the same name but different signatures.
- ? Integrate the software into the development process, so it can work in parallel with your VB development tools.

into the source code by revealing those areas that are prone to programming errors. The Visual VBDepend is a fully-fledged tool that not only easily integrates with Visual Studio but can also analyze individual code files regardless of their type or source language. The tool will help you to automatically detect and eliminate errors with

The present invention relates to a locking mechanism for securing a seat back of a motor vehicle seat to the corresponding seat cushion. There is already known a mechanism for locking a seat back to a seat cushion in which there is provided a pawl-like locking member, such as a rotary cap, mounted on the portion of the backrest below the seat cushion, and in which there are disposed locking holes formed in the seat cushion which are positioned to correspond to the longitudinal position of the locking member. When such a seat back is to be secured to the corresponding seat cushion, first the locking member is rotated so that its pawl-like shape may be received in the locking holes. When the seat back is finally fixed to the seat cushion, the pawl-like shape is locked in the corresponding locking hole of the seat cushion. In this known mechanism, however, the pawl-like shape of the locking member is rotated by a lever which is pulled by the hand of the driver or a passenger upon the actuation of a switch or the like. As a result, the seat back cannot be locked with ease and accurately. Additionally, because the pawl-like shape of the locking member is adapted for removal in the opposite direction, the seat back can not be locked with ease and accurately when the seat back is to be returned to the initial position.

Q: SQLAlchemy: Check constraint for a list of users I have a simple users table and I want to check that a user is not in a list of users in a separate table. What is the right way to do that? My main table has a many-to-many relationship to users and I thought I could use `check_constraint`, but I can't seem to get it to work. Here's an example:

class user(db.Model): id = db.Column(db.Integer, primary_key=True) username = db.Column(db.String(20), index=True) email = db.Column(
